insignia of his high apostolic office.
After stopping in front of the altar and reverencing the shrine, he was escorted to the throne of the gospel side of the altar where he took his seat, with his assistants on either side.
Archbishop Corrigan, attired in red

Apostolic delegate had taken his place.
He entered at the side of the altar, and was followed by about forty priests with white surpices.
He saluted the crucifix upon the altar and then retired to his seat on the white throne, opposite to that occupied by Mgr. Satelli.

The solemn pontifical mass then began

The gradual, offertory and communion were sung by the chancel choir of surpliced boys, under the directions of Prof.

Ingerer.

These ceremonies, with the responses and reading of the Gaspel and episile lasted nearly three-quarters of an hour when the first part of the services came to an end, and Archbishop Cerrigan descended from his throne and, with an escort of several priests, advanced to the pulpit at the edge of the chancel rail.

As he mounted to the top of the little spiral stairway leading to the platform, with its overhanging sounding-ionard, he removed his bereits, and drew from beneath his robe a small roil of manuscript.

He read his address from beginning

The tilmi affection of the late Cardinal for the Holy Father, said the Archbishop, was one of the most touching and beautiful traits of his character.

"As for myself," said the prelate, and his voice vibrated with the earnestness of his words and showed the effect of of the emotion which he felt. "I count it as an especial grace that I was able to pursue my studies in philosophy and theology under the very shadow of the Vettan.

The religious institutions were represented by at least a hundred sisters. Among the Catholic laymen were noticed John D. Crimmins and family. Mrs. William R. Grace and Mrs. Joseph W. Drexel.

The opening sentences of the mass were intoned in a clear and resonant tenor voice by the Apostolic Delegate who had descended from his throne, and approached the altar, swinging a golden censer, from which a cloud of incense arose.

His pronunciation was clear and distinct, and the Latin words that he uttered could be heard in every part of the church.

The chancel chart then took up the chanting of which Mgr. Satolil resumed his place upon the throne, and during the remainder of its celebration did not leave that station.

The music of the mass was sung without organ accompanient, by the Palestina Society, of forty voices, under the leadership of Father Samuel, of St. Joseph's. The music was of the grave polyphonal style of the early ages of church music, and its effect was solemn and impressive.

CORAL ROCKS IN THE DESERT.

Perpendicular Formation Nearly 200 Feet Migh Discovered. An interesting discovery comes to San Diego, California, by the way of the own of Julian, up in the mountains, A correspondent of its paper, the Weekly Sentinel, tells of a journey ever the Colorado desert. He had camped midway between the Seventeen Paim Springs, which is about twenty miles out, and the Fish Springs, some 250 feet below the sea level. From there he could trace for miles on the mountain side the line of a former sea, the portion that was below the water being of a dull gray.

From Fish Springs he travelled three miles to the base of the mountain, and found that instead of corroding lime, the almost perpendicular rock was of solid coral formation. 200 feet high, following ragged lines, filing crevices and lining a cave with a speciacle of magnificence.

The cave, 50 feet high by 25 feet wide, of coral lining, is hardly touched by time. In a little bay between two jagged points of the rocks the beach outlines are still distinct above the coral formation.

Little covers are cut in the rocks as evidences of shelter for the Indians, while from them run Indistinct trails upward. He had camped midway between the

"I am glad to see that you have come hither in such great numbers to do honor to our eminent guest, for to me it is the evidence of your unswerving loyalty and attachment to the Holy See of St. Peter's."

The Archbishop alluded to the importance of the Metropolitan See of New York and the prominent part which its bishops had taken in the past to show their loyalty to the Holy Father and the Church of Rome. He cited the letter written by Archbishop Hughes thirty years ago to Pope Pius IX. protesting against the sacrilegious spollation of the States of the Church, and of the late Cardinal McCloskey's special love and veneration of the Holy The tibul affection of the late Cardinal
